

NOTABLE RECEPTION TO MGR. RUSSELL

Distinguished Audience Attends the Event.

Five Hundred Guests Hear Speeches of High Commendation for Pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Who Was Invested with Office of Monsignor Sunday—President Sends Greetings.

Right Rev. William T. Russell, rector of St. Patrick's Church, who was yesterday elevated to the ecclesiastical dignity of a monsignor of the Catholic church, received a beautiful testimonial from the people of Washington and dignitaries of state and church in Carroll Hall last night.

Senor Don Joaquin Bernardo Calvo, Minister of Costa Rica; Cuno H. Rudolph, Commissioner of the District; Mr. Thomas J. Shahan, rector of the Catholic University of America; Francis Taylor, Judge William H. De Lacy, of the District of Columbia; W. Gwynn Gardner, and the Rev. William J. Carroll were the speakers at the reception to Mr. Russell given under the auspices of the League of the Good Shepherd, which was attended by 500 invited guests. Carroll Hall was decorated with flowers and flags, and was filled to its capacity. On the stage sat half a hundred men who are well known in public and private life in the city of Washington and beyond its limits.

The Rev. James A. Smyth, one of the three assistants to Mr. Russell at St. Patrick's, presided, and introduced the speakers. In a great chair of state, at the center of the stage, Mr. Russell, robed in his vestments.

THE BELASCOS.

The first speaker was Senor Calvo, who extended to Mr. Russell and the people of his parish a greeting from beyond the seas—from his own people in Central America. Commissioner Rudolph followed, reviewing the various achievements of the new monsignor, and eulogizing his accomplishments in the Catholic world. Mr. Shahan, of the Catholic University, extended the good wishes of the university, recalling that he was an alumnus of that institution.

"All Washington rejoices," said Mr. Shahan, "at the honor. It feels that the community can call on any man, be he priest or layman. He is a man of sense and heart, and we cannot help feel that he has earned all the honorably and well."

Hannis Taylor said, in part:

"The two things which have had the greatest and longest influence on the world are the Catholic Church and the Roman law, but the birth of both of these institutions date far back into the centuries, and some of us are beginning to feel that it is time for a renewal of faith in the great teachings from which many of us are drifting, perhaps unconsciously, away. But mainly what the world needs is a great spiritual revival."

"We need spiritual lifeboats to go and rescue some of the wanderers from the straits and narrow path. Friends are growing weary of the ceaseless encounter and a new era of spiritual enthusiasm must come to lift us out of the slough."

"From out of the gloom," continued Mr. Taylor, "unfortunately, the demise of Father Stafford came Father Russell. At first he appeared dimly in the distance to the people of his parish. Later they saw his outline, then his face, and heard his voice, and finally, he has come into their very hearts, and has filled a place which was thought would long remain vacant."

W. Gwynn Gardner, on behalf of the people of St. Patrick's parish, extended hearty congratulations.

Refers to the Women.

Judge De Lacy said:

"The men of the present day and generation are not much inclined to church-going. They remain content to let the women do the worshipping. When we think of the truth of this, we will better appreciate the work which Mr. Russell has accomplished by founding the League of the Good Shepherd, which has resulted in bringing to the church doors upward of 1,500 men."

Father Smith read a letter from Father McGulgan, who expressed regret at being unable to attend the ceremonies and sent greetings to Mr. Russell.

A letter from President Taft also was read by Father Smith. It followed:

My Dear Father Russell: I understand you are to be invested with the robes of a monsignor of June 5. Permit me to extend to you the warmest of congratulations and the warmest of recognition by the Vatican of your standing as a priest and a patriot and public-spirited member of the community.

The assistants to Mr. Russell were represented by Father William J. Carroll, who was received with a burst of hand-clapping.

Every person in the house came to his feet as Mr. Russell rose to address the audience.

After briefly thanking the audience and the speakers for the honor done him, he related an anecdote, which, he said, explained his position better than anything else. It was a quaint little tale of how a simple minded youth, a native of old Ireland, had through the joint operation of Providence and a "war-like" agreement, been elevated to the position of mayor.

Awed at seeing his son so honored, his mother asked him if he knew her, whereupon he replied that he scarcely knew himself.

This said Father Russell, was exactly his position.

What He Has Done.

"I cannot think now," said Father Russell, "of what I have been or done, but rather what is expected of me in the future."

Father Russell spoke of his assistants, and said that the Father Russell which was known to the world of Washington by his works was made up of four parts—Father Smyth, Father Carroll, Father McGulgan, and Father Russell. He also spoke of his secretary, Mr. Flynn, and of the work of the Sisters in the schools connected with the parish.

He concluded by looking into the gallery, where a quiet little woman in black sat unnoticed, and said that all he was and all that he had done belonged not to him, but to his mother.

Father Smith then read the following telegram from the Vatican:

Mons. W. Russell. The holy father honors with his heart the blessing which has been sent to you and your parish.

CARDINAL MERRILL DEL. VAL.

GLEN ECHO.

Large crowds continue to enjoy the pleasures of Glen Echo this week. Last night and Sunday the merry-go-round, the band concert, the dancing pavilion, and the other amusements were well patronized, and these attractions, allied with the scenic surroundings and the atmosphere of the place, make it very attractive for a day's outing or an evening diversion.

AT THE THEATERS

The Columbia Players scored signally last night in William C. de Mille's play, "Strongheart," the performance being, by great odds, the best of the season.

The play is one of de Mille's best efforts, full of dramatic force, with considerable character portraiture, and a theme of current interest. It is usually referred to as a "college play," by reason of its atmospheric environment, and favorable excitement, but in reality the leading idea is in connection with the love of an Indian, a son of a chief, educated in the East, taking on a veneer of the white man's civilization, and aspiring to the hand of a white girl, daughter of an aristocratic house.

The main interest centers in the role of Strongheart, as played by A. H. Buren, and again this actor gave striking evidence of his power as a first-class actor, portraying a character with that of Robert Edeson. Two other roles of feature interest were Billy Saunders, by Morris McHugh, and Buckley, head coach, by George W. Barbier. Mr. McHugh got plenty of comedy out of the part of the big, lubberly "center," and Mr. Barbier worked the coaching scene between the halves up to a realistic pitch.

Miss Francis Nelson was quite successful as Dorothy Nelson, the girl in the case, and certainly looked pretty good, every opportunity to display her civilized, semi-civilized, and savage. Among the other performers of note were Everett Butterfield, as Dick Livingston; Frederick Forrester, as Frank Nelson; John Kline, as Thomas, the villain; Stanley James, as "Rede," the "grind;" Arthur Ritchie, as Ross; Holland Hudson, as Taylor; Emmet Melville, as Mrs. Melville; Jess O'Connell, as Molly Livingston; Carrie Thatcher, as Maud Weston; and Nina Melville, as Betty Bates, with the minor roles also capably sustained.

THE BELASCOS.

Hall Calne's popular and powerful story of the conflict between asceticism and earthly love, "The Christian," was presented by the Belasco theater company last evening before an enthusiastic audience. The occasion was of special importance to patrons of the house, as it signified the return to Washington of Henry Mortimer, the first leader in this season of the Columbia Players, who, during his brief career at the other playhouse, had won a strong following.

In the role of John Storm, originally played by Edward J. Morgan, Mortimer had every opportunity to display his phase of his dramatic talent, and his performance was a delight to his friends and a pleasant surprise to those to whom he was unknown.

"The Christian" is too well known to need repeating. All theatergoers are familiar with the delightful feminine Glory Quayle and her fanatical religious sweetheart, John Storm. It is a story of never tired with repetition, and as presented by the Vagabonds forms one of the best stock attractions seen here in many years.

Margaret Snow, as Glory, gave a convincing, attractive performance, and her big scene with Storm in the fourth act was admirably acted. Osborne Brown was excellent in the sympathetic role of the company's minor role of Father Lamplugh with great distinction, and the Polly Love of Florence Huntington was an affecting portrayal. The scenic production entirely adequate.

THE CASINO.

The vaudeville bill at the Casino Theater this week is headed by Rutan and his song birds, who are almost an institution at that house. Their songs and imitations are good, and the clever piano playing of Rutan is a feature. Other acts for the first half of this week include Ed and Holla White in a happy-go-lucky sketch, including a boxing exhibition. The "Joy Trio," composed of a clever acrobat, and hand balancer, and two trained dogs, put up a most enjoyable act. Betty Dixon, a singing comedienne, rendered several songs in a pleasing manner; Baird and Martine, black-face comedians, sang and told laughable stories; Park Hunter, an expert banjoist, made a hit with his selections; and the motion picture plays were interesting.

For the balance of the week, beginning Thursday, the change of bill will include Rutan's song birds, a singing comedienne, rendered several songs in a pleasing manner; Baird and Martine, black-face comedians, sang and told laughable stories; Park Hunter, an expert banjoist, made a hit with his selections; and the motion picture plays were interesting.

THE COSMOS.

Leading a first-class bill at the Cosmos, the Metropolitan Minstrels, with Ray Deoley, are making a hit with the Washington audiences. They are a clever aggregation of juvenile performers and offer a complete miniature "first part," with songs, stories, dances, and ensemble numbers. Several catchy and tuneful songs are rendered by the youthful performers, while the dancing numbers were clever. Another act to score was Reddy and Hilton, in a comedy sketch entitled "A Day at the Season," replete with snappy conversation, and several songs.

The assistants to Mr. Russell were represented by Father William J. Carroll, who was received with a burst of hand-clapping.

Every person in the house came to his feet as Mr. Russell rose to address the audience.

After briefly thanking the audience and the speakers for the honor done him, he related an anecdote, which, he said, explained his position better than anything else. G. W. U. DEBATORS DEFEND UNIONISM

Peter R. Feldman Captures Prize Medal.

"BENEFIT SOCIAL CONDITIONS"

Argument of Affirmative Proves Strangely Convincing, While Negative Dwells on Question of Riots and Lawlessness of Union Labor. Seven Gets Honorable Mention.

The prize debate between honor men of the Columbia and Needham Debating societies of George Washington University was held last night in Masonic Temple.

The subject of the debate was "Benefit Social Conditions." The labor unions in the United States are, in the main, beneficial to the country. The affirmative was awarded a unanimous decision. The prize medal was won by Peter R. Feldman, of the negative, Norris L. Bowen, of the affirmative, received honorable mention.

The affirmative was represented by Peter R. Feldman, of the negative, Norris L. Bowen, of the affirmative, received honorable mention.

The negative was supported by William Reed Fitch (Needham), North Dakota; Peter R. Feldman (Columbia), Wisconsin; and J. Paul Owen (Needham), Pennsylvania.

The judges were Associate Justice Stafford, of the District Supreme Court; Representative Irvin S. Pepper, of Iowa, and B. W. W. Hanger, of the Bureau of Labor. Henry B. F. Macfarland presided. A programme of classical music was presented by Misses Mary Ann Cowen, Louise Mae Farrow, and Sue M. Grosvenor.

Benefit to Society.

The affirmative declared that to the labor unions are due the improved social conditions—the decrease in working hours, the decrease in the death rate among dangerous trades, the increase in output and efficiency, and the betterment of the general social and economic conditions.

The negative dwelt on the question of riots and lawlessness, and the danger to the general social and economic conditions.
